I guess this post from Michael Jackson defenders makes more sense:

The Michael Jackson Innocent Project
December 15, 2019 ·

VINCENT AMEN...ANOTHER SICKO!!!!!!

🍌 Vincent F. Amen now has the audacity to lump #MichaelJackson in with Jeffrey Epstein/R. Kelly while implying handlers are complicit in any alleged crimes (a page out of Vince Finaldi's playbook).

🍌 Despite Amen knowing firsthand how #MJ was maligned in the bogus Jason Arvizo case that Tom Sneddon named Amen a co-conspirator.

Vincent Amen, a friend of Frank Cascio and one of 5 unindicted co-conspirators in the entertainer's trial. Amen was at NL in 2003 with Cascio and the Arvizo family.

🍌 Keep in mind Amen also "told his story" to Diane Dimond this year for her book and defends her, and had acquired a copy of a single (alternate) juror's trial notes.

🍌 From this, he is now working on a book of his own with juror note excerpts in it.

Jeffrey Epstein sent Virginia Guiffre to Thailand for her to recruit a Thai girl for sex. Filth!

Epstein had lost interest in her because she was too old for him.

She said she convinced the wealthy financier to pay for her to get training to become a real professional masseuse and he arranged for her to take a class in Thailand. But she was also expected to bring home a Thai girl that Epstein had arranged to come to the Instead, Ms Guiffre met a man on the trip whom she fell in love with and married 10 days later. She moved with him to Australia to start a family.

What Virginia Giuffre? I guess you are not the art critic you believe you are...calling Rina's art trash. Maybe your talking about Maria Farmers Artwork... Rina received publicity as a result of her talent not yours Virginia by "Humping People and Suing" @tarapalmeri @jkbjournalist!

Anna Sorokin discusses a gallery exhibition that was inspired by her life.

By EMILY PALMER

Down a narrow hallway packed with lockers and plumes of marijuana and cigarette smoke, at A2Z Delancey, a small pop-up art gallery on the Lower East Side of Manhattan, some 150 unmasked art goers attended an opening recently for Anna Sorokin's first group gallery exhibition.

Sipping beers, viewers sat on couches, while some stepped outside to spray graffiti on a courtyard wall. A rock band was playing for about half an hour; musicians and guests furiously bobbing their heads, hair flying and convulsing in tandem.

For die-hards of the Netflix series "Inventing Anna," which described the fake German heiress's meteoric rise into Manhattan society — she bilked banks, stole a private jet and skipped out on hotel bills in a ploy to turn the Anna Delvey Foundation, a members-only arts club on Park Avenue South, into a reality — the opening couldn't have been less, well, Anna.

Of course, that's not how Ms. Sorokin (her real name), saw the scene: "I liked that it was gritty," Ms. Sorokin, 31, said from her cell at Orange County Correctional Facility in Goshen, N.Y., where she is now held by the immigration authorities after completing her four-year sentence for her convictions in 2019 for financial crimes.

"That superglam portrayal of me in the Netflix series is not that accurate," she said.

The show, titled "Free Anna Delvey," which closes Sunday, refers to her long-preferred name and current detainment for overstaying her visa. It includes the works of 33 other artists inspired by Ms. Sorokin's experience and centers on five 22-inch-by-30-inch Anna Delvey pencil and acrylic drawings, priced at $10,000. (Fifteen percent of the sale price of one of the drawings will go to a children's charity.)

But none of the Anna Delvey artworks were drawn by Ms. Sorokin. Those pieces, displayed toward the back of the room, were reproduced by Alfredo Martinez from drawings she made while incarcerated and had friends post to her Instagram account. (Mr. Martinez served prison time in the early 2000s for mail and wire fraud related to his forged drawings of Jean-Michel Basquiat, the graffiti artist.)

Ms. Sorokin said she had planned to make the larger-scale drawings herself, but the detention center restricted the size of the paper she could get inside the facility, so Mr. Martinez offered his expertise. "In the art world, it's very common to have an assistant," he said.

The collaborative drawings in the show include a woman corresponding with someone over a correctional services messaging system stating "Send Bitcoin" and a pencil drawing depicting a woman floating out to sea on a block of ice, entitled "Anna on ICE."

Julia Morrison, an artist who created NFTs out of messages she said the actor Armie Hammer sent her, said she first came upon Ms. Sorokin's sketches while scrolling through Instagram. Ms. Morrison, a co-curator of the show with Mr. Martinez, said she identified closely with Ms. Sorokin's story because her own mother served time in an immigration detention facility.

Ms. Morrison, who introduced Mr. Martinez to Ms. Sorokin's work, said most peo-

Top, a collaborative drawing by Anna Sorokin and Alfredo Martinez, "Send Bitcoin," and, above, "Her Royal Highness Princess Annoushka (Anna Delvey) Louise of Savoy," by Rina Oh.

Artwork Could Get Its Own Exhibition" and waited for her to call. And she did.

But her ICE detention within days of their call halted the planning process, they both said, adding that they reconnected through the texting app at the correctional facility and resumed planning earlier this year.

The night of the opening, Ms. Sorokin called Mr. Martinez to check in. He placed the call on speaker phone and held it high as people clamored to get a chance to say hello and congratulate her on the show.

"Free Anna Delvey!" people chanted before the call ended.

Among those in attendance was Todd Spodek, her trial lawyer, who did not leave with any of the drawings.

"I already have a few select pieces from the one-woman private art show that happened at 111 Centre Street," he quipped, referencing the location of her trial where she often sketched. But, he said, he was glad to a portrait of Marie Antoinette, casting Ms. Sorokin as a member of the Russian monarchy. "I'm making fun of the royals," Ms. Oh said. "Because she took advantage of those kinds of people and they usually take advantage of us."

For the show, Ms. Morrison took a sledgehammer to a commode stuffed with shredded papers inspired by former President Donald J. Trump.

Mr. Martinez said he hoped the exhibition would show the immigration authorities that Ms. Sorokin would have more to offer if she were able to get out from behind bars.

Chris Martine, an art dealer who has represented Ms. Sorokin for several months, said he was now planning a second exhibition — her first solo show — opening with 20 drawings at "an upscale Manhattan location," as early as April, with the hope of later taking it to Los Angeles, Miami, London and Paris, among other large cities.

But producing a show while detained is complicated. Ms. Sorokin confirmed she received 9-by-12-inch watercolor paper and 12 nontoxic colored pencils but her set of watercolors — mistaken for makeup — did not pass through the metal detector. She isn't allowed to use the pencil sharpener, so asks a correctional officer to sharpen her pencils.

Mr. Martine said he had texted her photographs that she requested for inspiration, among them: Balthazar Restaurant and Sant Ambroeus in SoHo; La Mamounia, the luxurious hotel in Marrakesh where she once stayed; Passages Malibu, the addiction treatment center just outside of which law enforcement officials arrested her in 2017; and the New York courthouse steps.

To help coordinate the show, and because her facility-issued tablet battery dies quickly, Ms. Sorokin has bartered with a volunteer team of detainees, who have swapped access to their devices for vending machine snacks that she buys through her commissary account. "I'm contributing to the local economy," Ms. Sorokin said.

From her detention cell, Ms. Sorokin reflected on how far her art career had come, built upon the failed attempt to start her foundation, and the events that had kept her behind bars for much of the last four and a half years. "It's ironic," she said. "How after having failed so publicly while trying to Virginia Giuffre took a tumble outside Manhattan federal court after she faced Rina Oh who is suing her for $10 million for publicly naming her as a recruiter for Jeffrey Epstein. The two have been battling it out in court since 2021 when Oh filed the lawsuit against fellow Giuffre for defamation, citing a series of year-old tweets that asserted that Oh was Epstein's girlfriend and recruited girls for him to abuse. Oh has said that the authorities have agreed with her that she was also a young victim of Epstein 20 years ago and not a co-conspirator or part of his inner circle. The two women were back in court on Wednesday. Giuffre was being escorted from the courthouse with a suit jacket over her head when she suddenly stumbled and fell to the pavement. Security rushed to her side and helped her to her feet.
